REVISED

BY H. STRAFFORD.

LONDON:

PRINTED BY JOSEPH ROGERSON, 24, NORFOLK STREET, STRAND.

MDCCXLVI.
A GREAT and increasing demand being still made for the early volumes of the Herd Book has induced the present Proprietor of that Work to undertake another Edition, in order to meet a call so continual and complimentary. From the long period since its first publication by the late respected Mr. George Coates, coupled with the high character the Book, as a work of reference, everywhere obtained, the first, second, and third volumes gradually became out of print. To supply the deficiency thus occasioned is, to a certain extent, the object of the present re-issue; a single volume which contains the whole of the Bulls (from No. 1 to 2897) as found in the three first volumes of the original edition, and which consequently makes, in conjunction with volume the fourth, that portion of the Herd Book complete to the close of 1842. It is proposed also to collect in one volume the Cows and their produce, running over the same space, dividing it into two parts. This, however, it will be impossible to enter upon previous to the publication of the two volumes at present in preparation, and which, comprising the sixth of Bulls and the seventh of Cows, with their produce, carry the work up to and through the year 1845. Beyond this it is only necessary to add that this volume has been got up strictly in accordance with the plan of the author.
Any consideration as to the necessity for a work of this character, or of the manner in which it has hitherto been prepared, form no subjects for the present proprietor and editor of the Herd Book to usher in his own name with. Both have been long and amply answered. The use of the Book and the ability of its originator can be best estimated by the reception it has met with from the public—a support far too decided to require one word of explanation for either its revision or continuation. The editor is fully sensible that the grand point now rests with himself; the question how far he may be qualified to succeed those who have succeeded so well, and how able he may be to progress in a pursuit, of which the most arduous part has been accomplished. Here again he knows that to a great extent he must turn to the same proof as his predecessors, and that his labours must be looked on as his best arguments. At the same time, however, he may perhaps be permitted to offer a word or two on the reasons which led him to enter on duties for which so much experience, if not indeed natural predilection, is required. For above twenty years, then, has the study of his profession constantly associated him with the most eminent breeders and farmers of the kingdom, while his long intimacy with the Messrs. Coates, has, he flatters himself, been attended with some of that advantage their well-practised observation might be supposed to impart. Thus, with the thorough countenance of those who commenced, and the kind encouragement of a large number of eminent breeders, whose support went so far to establish the Herd Book—amongst the first of whom may be ranked the late esteemed Earl Spencer—its new editor determined not only to revise what appears here, but to continue the body of the work according to the material he may collect, and the occasion there may be for using it. That this may be effected with something of that feeling of mutual satisfaction which hitherto has passed between its patrons and proprietors is his greatest hope, and one which shall lack no attention or exertion on his part to realize.

The main features in the construction of the Herd Book, it has already been stated, will be adhered to throughout, at the same time that any improvement likely to further the interests of breeders, or assist the reader in his researches, will of course be adopted. Amongst the first and most important of these, it has been suggested that the appearance of the volumes in continuation at much shorter intervals than has yet been customary, would considerably increase the value and utility of the work as one of every-day reference. With this the editor will do all in his power to comply, though, in attempting it, he will be compelled to ask even greater assistance from those kind and constant friends whose labours in its behalf have tended materially to make the Herd Book the correct chronicle of a breed of animals it has become no less a national pride than a profit to produce. "The authority," in fact, of a work which gathers its contents from such a variety of sources and districts depends very greatly on those who consult it: from such we should be indebted for the correction of error and the conveyance of information. Indeed, to the majority of those who have achieved that success which he merely records, the compiler has the happiness to add he does stand indebted; and while, as in duty bound, he returns his best thanks for the past, it is accompanied with the hope that he may merit the same able assistance for the future.
